Dementia crisis looms, judge warns

HEALTH CARE

Calls for more secure units in personal care homes

A Manitoba judge is calling for secure units in all personal care homes to handle aggressive and violent patients with dementia.

The number of people across Canada who suffer from Alzheimer's is rising sharply and there must be a corresponding increase in special areas for residents who may lash out, provincial court Judge Michel Chartier said in an inquest report released Friday.

"There are more than 500,000 people living in Canada with Alzheimer's disease. By 2030, there will be more than 1.1 million people in Canada affected by this disease and the number of persons in long-term care in our country will have increased tenfold," Chartier wrote in his 41-page report.

The judge led an inquest into the March 2011 death of Frank Alexander, 87, at the Parkview Place care home in Winnipeg. Alexander was assaulted by another resident, Joe McLeod, who had Alzheimer's and had been in the Winnipeg Remand Centre after attacking his wife at their home a year earlier.

The inquest was told McLeod's mental capacity had deteriorated to the point where he sometimes didn't recognize his wife and attacked her because he believed she was a stranger. He spent four weeks in the remand centre before space was found in a personal care home.

McLeod continued to behave violently toward staff and other residents at Parkview Place. It culminated in the fatal assault on Alexander, who died after falling backwards and hitting his head on the floor. McLeod himself died earlier this year.

The report cites a shortage of beds for high-risk personal care home residents — one that will only grow as the population ages.

"Evidence is clear that the queue for these behavioural units can be as much as one year in length. This is not acceptable," Chartier wrote.

The report made a number of recommendations, including:

- Every personal care home in the Winnipeg Regional Health Authority's area have a special, secure unit to handle violent patients.
- The number of available beds should be increased so that the waiting period does not exceed 60 days.
- Increased staff training and new safety protocols at personal care homes to ensure that violent patients are fully monitored and prevented from harming others.

SAFETY

City releases report of boil-water event

The city has released a report on a boil-water advisory that kept Winnipeggers from drinking tap water back in January.

"I am pleased that, as committed, citizens can access the external review of the precautionary boil-water event from this past January on the City of Winnipeg website," said Mayor Brian Bowman.

"It's important that Winnipeggers have access to the analysis that determines the safety of our city's water."

On April 30, the city submitted a report to the Office of Drinking Water to relay the findings and recommendations of an external assessment of the City of Winnipeg's water system.

Mayor Brian Bowman

The report concluded that the city's water was safe, and that positive samples that led to boil-water advisories were likely related to either sampling or analytical processes.

Pools opening up to cool Winnipeg down

Winnipeg's outdoor pools, wading pools and spray pads are ready to open for the season.

Most spray pads opened on Saturday, and will be open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day, weather permitting, until the first week of September.

Kildonan Park Outdoor Pool will open June 15 for the summer, and all other city outdoor pools are scheduled to open June 26.

All outdoor pools also operate seven days a week, weather permitting.

As part of a two-year pilot project, entry to six non-heated outdoor pools will be free all summer long.

The city will also see 17 wading pools open July 1, and the remaining locations open July 2.

Hours for outdoor pools and wading pools vary depending on the location.

Information, hours and locations for city spray pads, outdoor pools and wading pools can be found by calling 311, or at winnipeg.ca.

Slain little girl will 'be missed so much'

GARDEN HILL

The search continues for more remains of 11-year-old

Officials on a northern Manitoba reserve say the search is still on for more remains of an 11-year-old girl who was slain earlier this month.

A funeral was held last week for Teresa Robinson on the Garden Hill First Nation, 500 kilometres northeast of Winnipeg.

At first, reserve officials thought Teresa had been the victim of a bear attack, but RCMP later determined her death was a homicide.

The initial discovery of partial remains took place almost three weeks ago, and since then hundreds have rallied to help her family find as much of her remains as possible.

George Leonard of Manitoba Search and Rescue told CTV Winnipeg there were "some small pieces" they were hoping to recover, saying once that was put to rest, "the community will be a lot happier."

Chief Arnold Flett doesn't know what they'll do if they find more of her remains after the funeral but for now said all they can do is try to come to terms with the tragedy.

"Even if we don't find all remains, we know that we did our best, all we can do," he said.

In preparation for the funeral, friends and family gathered at a wake service to support the girl's family.

Inside the home, her grandparents and elders sat near Teresa's casket praying for strength and healing.

"She'll be missed so much. She was a loving and kind person," said Teresa's aunt, Michelle Robinson.

Police have not yet made any arrests in the case and some in the community said they're scared not knowing how Teresa died or who killed her.

"It's hard to imagine what's been happening and what we're going to face," said Flett.

Police make arrest in residential robbery

Winnipeg police have arrested a woman in connection to a residential robbery that saw a man assaulted at his St. James Street apartment earlier this month, but three other suspects remain on the loose.

Police say a 41-year-old man was assaulted by a woman known to him, another woman and two men after they knocked on his door at an apartment at 666 St. James Street around 7 p.m. May 20.

The victim was taken to hospital with non-life threatening injuries.

Police have arrested Kelly Ducharme in connection to the assault, while another suspect, Andrea Anne Cederwall, 24, remains at large.

Police also released surveillance photos of two men they're trying to identify Friday.

Anyone with information should call police at 204-986-2877 or Winnipeg CrimeStoppers at 204-786-TIPS.

No injuries in Friday morning blaze

Firefighters on the scene of a fire at a duplex in the Shaughnessy Park neighbourhood Friday morning say the quick thinking of two passerbys may have saved the lives of four people — including two kids — who were inside when the blaze began.

Acting platoon chief Ian Campbell said two roofers in the area noticed smoke coming from the duplex at 1166 Mountain Avenue around 9 a.m. and let two women and two children who were inside the upper suite know to get out before calling 911.

Campbell said the fire started in the basement of the bottom suite, which appeared to be vacant. No one was injured in the fire, and an estimate on damage wasn't immediately available.

COMMUNITY

Police, city staff join volunteers at annual north-end cleanup

Shane Gibson
Metro | Winnipeg

City staff—including police and their boss Chief Devon Clunis—were in the north end Friday to help an estimated 150 volunteers clean up streets in the neighbourhood.

Clunis, who lived on Selkirk Avenue when he first came to Winnipeg from Jamaica 40 years ago, told media the effort is as much about bringing a sense of safety and pride to the area as it is about beautification.

"We're not saying this is the cure, but it's one piece of it," he said. "It's the first step that we can do to get people really engaged in their community."

"You can't just get to the deeper issues, you have to start here." Volunteers wearing gloves toting garbage bags and litter sticks covered 110 city blocks in William Whyte, Dufferin and Lord Selkirk Park.

Clunis watched as a bulldozer tore down a burned-out garage on a lane behind Selkirk Avenue and helped volunteers turn an empty lot on the street into a community garden.

And it wasn't just people from the north end lending a hand.

West-end resident Helen Shettler was planting raspberries in the lot when Clunis grabbed a shovel to help.

"It's about paying it forward and loving the community," said Shettler about what brought her and others from Gateway Church. "God loves the community and the people here and we're participating in that."

The cleanup is an annual event that's grown over the last decade, according to Annette Champion-Taylor from the William Whyte Residents Association, who said every year volunteers have less and less to clean up.

"When we talk about cleaning up, it's not just the litter ... it's about respect for the neighbourhood," she said. "Every year it's getting bigger and better ... it's making a difference."

The work continued Saturday, with more members of the Winnipeg Police Service executive joining the effort.

City wants new funding deal for Toews rec centre

The city says it wants to make "adjustments" to how much cash they will hand over to help build the Jonathan Toews Fieldhouse, as the cost of the project continues to balloon.

The project budget for the proposed recreation centre in south Winnipeg sat at $9.5 million in 2013, but has gone up twice, and now sits at $17.9 million.

On Friday the city released a statement saying they will make changes to their 2013 budget to allow for a grant of $13.7 million for the project.

The new deal would see the city hand over $6.7 million, with $7 million coming from the province, and the remaining $4.2 million coming from the Dakota Community Centre.

In 2013 the city and province were both on the hook for only $4.76 million each.

The proposed facility, which would sit next to the Jonathan Toews Community Centre, would be a multi-use rec centre, with three indoor playing fields, and a running area. METRO

Retired Churchill Tundra Buggy sent to Wisconsin zoo

A decommissioned Tundra Buggy is heading south to become part of a U.S. zoo's new polar bear exhibit.

Frontiers North Adventures said Thursday one of their retired Tundra Buggies is heading to Henry Vilas Zoo in Madison, Wis., to be part of the zoo's new Arctic Passage exhibit.

Tundra Buggies are a fixture around Churchill. A little like a bus on enormous wheels and bigger than most tanks, the buggies are designed to roll slowly through the arctic tundra for safe observation of polar bears and other northern wildlife.

"Frontiers North Adventures is proud to have helped Buggy 5 find a new home at Henry Vilas Zoo, one of just 10 remaining free zoos in the North America," said

Deaths at residential schools need more study: Commission

Assembly of First Nations Chief Perry Bellegarde (in headdress) and Justice Murray Sinclair (in black suit), TRC commissioner, march during the Walk for Reconciliation, part of the closing events of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission on Sunday in Gatineau, Que. JUSTIN TANG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

TRUTH AND RECONCILIATION

Justice Sinclair estimates 6,000 kids died

The commission that has spent five years examining one of the darkest chapters in Canada's history is winding up its work with a key question left unanswered — exactly how many aboriginal children died in residential schools?

Justice Murray Sinclair, who heads the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, says the federal government stopped recording the deaths around 1920 after the chief medical officer at Indian Affairs suggested children were dying at an alarming rate.

"He was fired," Sinclair says. "The government stopped recording deaths of children in residential schools, we think, probably because the rates were so high."

Sinclair has guessed up to 6,000 children may have died at the schools, but it's impossible to say with certainty.

More than 130 years after the first residential schools were established to "take the Indian out of the child," the commission will release a summary of its six-volume final report on Tuesday. It will include testimony from survivors, as well as numerous recommendations.

The commission didn't originally intend to examine how many children never came home, but it quickly emerged as an issue, Sinclair says.

Schools were often crowded, poorly ventilated and unsanitary. Children died from smallpox, measles, influenza and tuberculosis. Some were buried in unmarked graves in school cemeteries, while others were listed as "missing" or "discharged." In some cases, parents never found out what happened.

Some provinces handed over death certificates to the commission, but Sinclair says the work is far from over.

The $60-million commission was part of a landmark compensation deal between Ottawa, the Crown and residential school survivors. It visited hundreds of communities and heard testimony from 7,000 survivors, including graphic details of rampant sexual and physical abuse.

The legacy of the schools is evident today, Sinclair says. High poverty rates, a large number of aboriginal children in foster care, a disproportionate number of aboriginals in jail and hundreds of missing and murdered aboriginal women can all be traced back to residential schools, he suggests.

Exploding Arctic snow geese numbers still high

After more than a decade of devastating huge swaths of Arctic tundra, booming populations of snow geese may have finally stabilized.

But scientists say the teeming flocks, which have turned fertile grasslands into salty mud flats, are still at unheard-of levels and have forced wildlife managers to consider a whole new problem.

"We've always wanted more (wildlife) and protected them and saved them and increased their numbers," said Dave Duncan, manager of population conservation for the Canadian Wildlife Service. "Just in the last little while wildlife management is faced with this new conundrum of overabundant species."

In the last 20 years, new farming methods have resulted in better food supply along the big white birds' migration routes and their population has responded. In the 1970s and '80s, there were between two million and three million snow geese in central North America. Now there are about 15 million.

Nesting colonies now are so large the birds are destroying their own habitat. But something seems to have finally stalled growth, says Environment Canada scientist Ray Alisauskas.

There's more good news. Duncan said that at least some ravaged colony sites along the west coast of Hudson Bay appear to be recovering. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Female Mounties seek class-action suit

At age 22, Quebec native Joanne Mayer was greeted at her first RCMP posting in Gibsons, B.C., with a handshake and a blunt statement from the sergeant: "We don't think women should be in the force, and especially not French-speaking ones."

Mayer said that along with her regular duties, she spent over two years doing "sexist" chores including making coffee, ensuring there was an ample supply of cream and sugar, and cleaning police cruisers. Now, Mayer has joined hundreds of other former and current RCMP members hoping for justice over alleged gender discrimination, bullying and harassment with a potential class-action lawsuit.

A five-day hearing to determine certification of a class-action proceeding involving 362 women is set to begin Monday in B.C. Supreme Court.

Lawyer David Klein said that while he believes the RCMP has been taking steps to reduce harassment, people who have made allegations are still being challenged on every statement they make. THE CANADIAN PRESS

POLICE

Rollout of carbines criticized

RCMP officers who raced to a New Brunswick neighbourhood under siege by Justin Bourque say the force has failed to supply them with recommended guns and training, months after a report urged the organization to do just that.

Some frontline officers, who spoke to The Canadian Press on the condition that they remain anonymous because they are not allowed to speak publicly, say they fear for their safety because most members still do not have carbine rifles or training on how to use them.

One RCMP officer who witnessed Bourque gun down a colleague last June 4 in Moncton says the organization has moved too slowly in rolling out the carbines and training.

Another member says officers feel they are outgunned and are increasingly bitter that repeated calls for better weaponry over the last decade haven't prompted a swift response from RCMP headquarters.

He says only four people in his detachment of about 80 members have been trained on the Colt C8 carbine, a semi-automatic weapon that is highly regarded for its accuracy and long range.

The RCMP moved the first carbines out in 2013, with 2,200 now available for 12,000 members. Carbine training has stepped up since last year, but the force won't reveal how many officers have been trained.

In mid-May, the RCMP was charged with violating the Canada Labour Code.

NSA's surveillance programs expire

U.S. Senate fails to extend deal ahead of midnight

The National Security Agency was expected to lose its authority at midnight Sunday to collect Americans' phone records in bulk, after an extraordinary Sunday Senate session failed to produce a deal to extend the fiercely contested program.

Intelligence officials warned that the outcome amounts to a win for extremist groups. But civil liberties groups applauded the demise, at least temporarily, of the once-secret program made public by NSA contractor Edward Snowden.

The program is all but certain to be revived in a matter of days, although it also looks certain to be completely overhauled under House of Representatives-passed legislation that Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell reluctantly blessed Sunday evening.

With most senators opposed to extending the current law unchanged, even for a short time, McConnell said the House bill was the only option left, other than letting the program die off.

The Senate voted 77-17 to move ahead on the House-passed bill. But no final action was expected before Sunday's midnight deadline after McConnell's fellow Kentucky Republican Sen. Rand Paul said he would assert his prerogatives under Senate rules to delay a final vote for several days.

"This is what we fought the revolution over, are we going to so blithely give up our freedom?" Paul said. Fellow Republicans exited the chamber en masse when he stood up to speak.

Sen. John McCain complained to reporters that Paul places "a higher priority on his fundraising and his ambitions than on the security of the nation."

In addition to the bulk phone collections provision, two lesser-known Patriot Act provisions also lapsed at midnight: One, so far unused, helps track "lone wolf" terrorism suspects unconnected to a foreign power. The second allows the government to eavesdrop on suspects who continually discard their cellphones. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIA

Intense heat wave to last another day

Despite hopes that weekend thundershowers would help end a raging heat wave in southern India, the rain brought only limited relief as the death toll since mid-April approached 2,200.

Officials said Sunday that the scorching heat was likely to continue for another day in worst-hit Andhra Pradesh and Telangana states.

Daytime temperatures hovered between 45 and 47 degrees Celsius in parts of the two states over the weekend, 3 to 7 degrees Celsius above normal, said K.Y. Reddy, a director of the Meteorological Center in the Telangana state capital of Hyderabad.

Andhra Pradesh has been hit the hardest, with 1,636 people dying in the state from the heat over the past month and a half, a government statement said. Another 561 people have died in neighbouring Telangana, said Sada Bhargavi, a state disaster management commissioner.

Twenty-two people have died in northern Uttar Pradesh state over the past two weeks, said Raj Shekhar, a state government official. The Press Trust of India news agency said 21 people have died from the heat in eastern Orissa state, seven in western Gujarat state and two in New Delhi, India's capital.

Journalists covering migrant rescue effort detained by Navy

Myanmar's navy briefly detained journalists who tried to reach a remote island Sunday where more than 700 migrants were being held after their giant wooden ship was found drifting off the country's southwestern coast.

Some journalists were forced to hand over their camera memory cards or sign documents saying they would not try to make the journey again.

The wooden boat was one of more than a half-dozen that have either washed to southeast Asian shores or been rescued in the last month following a massive, regional crackdown on human trafficking networks.

Around half of the 3,700 people to come ashore have been Rohingya Muslims fleeing persecution in Myanmar, according to the UN Refugee Agency, and the remainder Bangladeshis escaping poverty.

Myanmar, however, has denied that Rohingya have been among the boat people, saying all have been from Bangladesh.

It insisted Sunday that all 727 people on board the ship recovered in the Bay of Bengal on Friday — including 74 women and 45 children — were Bangladeshi.

A navy commander at the base, who refused to give his name, told the Associated Press that "we have safely rescued migrants from Bangladesh."

He said they were brought inside a naval base compound, though the Associated Press was able to see tops of the heads of around 50 people still on board.

EGYPT

More than 2,600 killed since Morsi ousted from power

At least 2,600 people were killed in violence in the 18 months after the military overthrew Egypt's president in 2013, nearly half of them supporters of the Islamist leader, the head of a state-sanctioned rights body said Sunday.

Mohammed Fayeeg, head of the National Council for Human Rights, told reporters that the 2,600 included 700 policemen and 550 civilians who were killed in the period between June 30, 2013 and Dec. 31, 2014.

The council is a nominally independent group sanctioned by the government. It has no judicial or law enforcement powers.

The military overthrew Mohammed Morsi, Egypt's first freely elected president, on July 3, 2013, amid massive protests demanding his resignation. The violence culminated on Aug. 14, 2013, when police violently dispersed two pro-Morsi sit-ins in Cairo, killing at least 600 of his supporters. Since then, the military-backed government has waged a sweeping crackdown on Morsi's Muslim Brotherhood.

Rights groups and activists have alleged widespread human rights abuses since Morsi's ouster.

The government has defended its practices as being necessary to combat Islamic militancy.

It's time to apologize for the persecution of gays and lesbians

It was dubbed the fruit machine.

Created by the Canadian government in the 1960s, it was supposed to determine if you were gay.

It could be from a John le Carré novel, but it's a real part of our government's history of terrorizing gays and lesbians in the civil service. And it's past time for an apology.

Developed by a Canadian psychologist, the fruit machine measured pupil dilation and palm sweat as you viewed images of half-naked men or women. On top of that came intrusive questions about masculinity and femininity, all in a bid to scientifically deduce your sexuality.

The fruit machine never made it out of the testing phase. It was scrapped in 1967. But investigations, interrogations and dismissals of gay employees continued for decades.

Throughout the Cold War period, the government viewed gays as a security risk whose "character weakness" left them susceptible to blackmail, said Laurentian University professor emeritus Gary Kinsman.

"Thousands and thousands of people were investigated by the RMCP during these years."

You've likely not heard about this. You soon will.

Activists, NDP MPs and victims of the purge will gather on Parliament Hill Tuesday to demand an official government apology for Canada's so-called war on queers (the title of a book co-authored by Kinsman). It's not the first such call. But let's hope it's the last.

First and foremost, for people like Christine. In the late 1970s, she was interrogated and lost her job in the military for being a lesbian.

She was asked, "Do you like to masturbate in front of a mirror? Who takes the garbage out? Do you use a dildo? Do you hate men?" according to a statement from the We Demand an Apology Network.

Investigators demanded suspects like Christine give the names of other gays, and denied them security clearances for promotions. Fear led people to closet themselves and, in some cases, commit suicide, Kinsman said.

For the victims, an apology would bring closure and restore honour. For the rest of us, it would reveal the truth.

We need to hear about this hunt that ruined careers and lives. We need to hear about the science-fiction-esque fruit machine and the bigoted philosophy behind it.

Keeping silent would implicitly condone discrimination that is, in different ways, still happening today.

Homophobia has no place in our government. It's time to step up and declare it never did.

Kick the fear of heights and build up Polo Park

INSIDE THE PERIMETER

Shannon VanRaes

It's time for Winnipeg to set its sights higher — literally.

Maybe it was our proximity to the Great Plains or our natural aversion to inclines, but whatever the reason, Winnipeg has a serious fear of heights. No, not acrophobia, I'm talking about the city's aversion to multi-use, multi-storey buildings.

One need look no further than Winnipeg's tragically short-lived Target store at Polo Park to see the problem. Now just a passably functional two-storey box drifting in a sea of surface parking, it could have been so much more.

Oh sure, the building has been purchased by Cadillac Fairview — which already owns Polo Park Mall — and a new tenant will eventually move into the retail space. And in the coming years more squat, flat-roofed boxes will spring up around it until, ensconced in the safe harbour of mediocrity, it no longer sticks out like a sore thumb.

But retail development is a poor substitute for urban planning. Time and again, Winnipeg's city council debates and discusses the need to extend services and transportation to newly-built and expanding subdivisions at the edge of our community.

Where is the discussion around bringing people to areas of our city that are already well-served and stocked with amenities?

The area around Polo Park contains our largest mall, a major entertainment district and one of the city's largest transit hubs. Hospitals are close at hand, and thanks to that infamous land-swap deal, so are emergency responders. It's even close to major routes and green spaces like Westview Park and Omand Park.

So why haven't our civic leaders or local developers pushed for residential development at Polo Park?

Just close your eyes and imagine this. That long sought-after American big-box store is finally coming to Winnipeg. Picture its glassy atrium, its svelte mannequins, or maybe its kayaks and tents, whatever scratches the itch. But wait, what's that above the trademarked marquee? Is that office space? Good gosh! And above that, could it be? Are those apartments and condos? They are! And — by now you might be feeling a little dizzy — is that underground parking? Add some prairie-grass landscaping to the fantasy and you just might faint.

That's right, I'm suggesting retail development in conjunction with residential development in multi-storey buildings. Not skyscrapers, but buildings that make good, full-some use of valuable space.

Yes, this kind of development takes money. It also takes vision and requires a city council that's willing to regulate development and provide holistic planning.

But they're ideas worth getting off the ground — even if it requires a few flights of stairs.

The Uber effect changes everything

ON-DEMAND

Services at the touch of a screen keep expanding

A taxi app. A ride-sharing company. A mobile-based car service.

Uber, invariably described as one of the above, will face Toronto city hall's lawyers on Monday to argue over whether it operates as an unlicensed cab service.

Last week, Edmonton cab drivers marched in protest at city hall, shouting "shame, shame" because they say the ride-sharing program doesn't fall under the same regulations they do. City councils from Calgary to Ottawa are trying to figure out how, and if, to regulate this new and growing business.

But don't let the regulatory fight distract you: Uber isn't really about cars.

Uber's app now connects ride seekers to drivers in more than 300 cities. But the explosive success of its business model — service delivery at the tap of a touch screen, usually provided by casual contractors — is so widely imitated that it's even launched new lingo in the tech startup world: "It's like Uber for X," or "Uber for fill-in-the-blank,"

On-demand mobile business is growing. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE has become an eye-rolling cliché among the tech press corps.

Among the range of what are sometimes called "on-demand mobile services," there are Uber-like apps for groceries, babysitters and valet parking. There are others for manicurists, bodyguards and medical marijuana. Uber itself offers food delivery in four cities, including this one.

You don't have to like Uber — and the aggressively expanding company has attracted its fair share of criticism. But you should know that any licensing-and-standards squabble is just one corner of a bigger conversation about technology, jobs and digital disruption.

Below are some of the other services the Uber model has spawned. (Unlike Uber itself, few are available in Canada — so far.) TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Uber for laundry

In the Washio app, users set a 30-minute pickup window for their dry cleaning and laundry. A "ninja" comes to get the clothes and returns them a day later, clean.

Uber for takeout

In an increasingly crowded field, apps like Caviar, SpoonRocket and UberEATS let users tap on a restaurant-cooked meal option and have it delivered to their door or desk by couriers (or by Uber drivers during the low-volume lunch hour).

Uber for groceries

Apps like Instacart let users fill up a virtual grocery cart. When they hit the "buy" button, shoppers — freelancers who receive a notification based on their location — pick up the goods and pocket part of a flat fee.

Uber for child and pet minding

Apps such as Urbansitter and the Toronto-based DateNight connect parents with local, available and vetted childminders, while services including DogVacay and DoggyBnB link pet owners with walkers and sitters.

Uber for anything (legal) you want

A startup called Magic went viral last year after billing itself as the quintessential "Uber for X," or "Uber for fill-in-the-blank." Text an operator anything (legal) you want — a plate of sushi bicycled to the park bench you're sitting at, an airplane ticket to Portugal, a puppy — and the service will get it to you. Uber co-founder Garrett Camp recently launched a slicker version of a similar get-me-anything service, a personal shopping app called Operator.

How to say no to superiors

Taking on extra work can mean performing below par

OFFICE RELATIONS

Eleni Deacon

Your days are so packed with meetings and emails that you barely have time for work. You've got a report due next Wednesday and a presentation the following morning. You stay late at the office and spend Sundays catching up. But when your manager asks for help on a new project, you cheerfully agree — despite having long surpassed max capacity. After all, isn't it bad to say no to your boss? Not necessarily.

While no employee wants to appear unco-operative, excessive compliance sends an equally dangerous message: that you're never not on call. It can be uncomfortable to assert boundaries — but it's even more uncomfortable to exhaust yourself by accepting a not-humanly-possible pile of work.

There should be a payoff if you take on beyond-your-job duties. ISTOCK

When tasked with beyond-your-job duties, assess the request. Is it a meaty project that could give your career a boost? That could be worth shuffling your priorities. Mundane grunt-work with no foreseeable payoff? Your weekend would be better spent at the pool. Learning to say no isn't about constantly saying you can't — it's about saying yes more selectively.

If the idea of standing your ground makes you shudder, remember that saying no doesn't literally mean saying the word. When your boss presents you with extra assignments, express calm but firm concern. Outline what's presently on your plate and explain that your current endeavours might suffer if your attention is diverted. Don't whine about having too much to do. Keep the focus on maintaining the quality of work, rather than complaining about volume.

Still can't agree to say no? Consider a compromise. Maybe you're too swamped to write that entire debrief, but a few sections might be manageable. And while a big new project just won't fit your sched, you could offer to supervise someone more junior — read: less frazzled — while they learn the ropes. A flat-out no leaves your boss without any option but to insist you do the work. By providing an alternative course of action, you give yourself an out.

Doing a great job doesn't necessarily mean doing every job. Learn to limit your load, and you'll leave room to overperform. Overextend and you're likely to under-deliver.

Narcissism in numbers

According to U.K. online publication the Mirror, an average young woman spends five hours a week taking selfies. Hey, it takes a long time to put on makeup, get the hair right, master the perfect pout, find an attractive angle, choose a filter...

Those five hours average out to about 48 minutes a day. It certainly seems like a long time to snap a pretty picture. It doesn't mention any other stats, like how long the average woman spends looking at other people's selfies on Instagram.

Singer slices fingers at show but plays on for half hour more Enrique Iglesias was recovering Sunday after some of his fingers were sliced when he grabbed a drone during a concert in Tijuana, Mexico.

A representative for the singer said in a statement to The Associated Press that Iglesias was "semi-treated" after the accident at the side of the stage to stop the bleeding on Saturday night. He was advised to end the show but went on to perform for an additional 30 minutes.

"During the show a drone is used to get crowd shots and some nights Enrique grabs the drone to give the audience a Point of View shot. Something went wrong and he had an accident," the statement read. "He decided to go on and continued playing for 30 minutes while the bleeding continued throughout the show."

Concertgoers at Plaza de Toros de Playas posted photos on social media of Iglesias, 40, with blood all over his white T-shirt.

NO 'DUMB ACTRESS'

Portman opens up about college woes

Harvard graduate and Oscar winner Natalie Portman returned to Cambridge this year to speak at commencement, and she used the opportunity to get candid about the difficulties she faced when she first arrived at the school.

"It's easy to romanticize my time here, but I had some difficult times. Being 19, dealing with my first heartbreak, taking birth control that's now off the market due to its depressive side effects," Portman revealed during her speech.

And then there was the whole being in Star Wars thing:

"When I got to Harvard just after the release of Star Wars: Episode I, I feared people would assume I had gotten in just for being famous, and not worthy of the intellectual rigour here," she said, adding that she was desperate to prove she "wasn't a dumb actress."

Look, I know she's trying to be inspiring and all, but seriously, if beautiful, famous and intelligent Natalie Portman can't make it through undergrad unscathed, what hope is there for us mere mortals?

Jackson's Neverland selling for $100M

Neverland, the sprawling California ranch that was once the location of "King of Pop" Michael Jackson's mind-boggling amusement park, is up for sale for $100 million, realtors said Friday.

But an expert said the price tag is "optimistic," given the unproven charges of child molestation that tainted Jackson's final years before his death in 2009.

Kristen Bell's Uber awkward carpool

There's a lesson to be learned from Kristen Bell's recent misadventure with Uber: Be careful which option you select, because Uber Pool — the furthest one to the left — means you're sharing your ride.

The Veronica Mars star thought she was getting a normal, iPhone-enabled ride home when things took a turn for the more communal. "Didn't know Uber had a carpool option, but my driver just pulled over and said, 'Gotta pick someone else up.' This should be fun," she tweeted.

But her discomfort is our entertainment, as she went on to live-tweet the incredibly awkward ride, fears for her safety and all: "Not sure where the other rider is headed but we're getting close to my house," she wrote. "Then it occurs to me 'What if he's coming over?'"

Huh. Maybe the lesson is keep using the Uber Pool option because unwitting celebrities might end up sharing some awkward silence with you. NED EHRBAR/METRO

Many kids who go to camp cherish their memories there. Camps can help children gain confidence and independence by removing them from the competition they face at school and encouraging them to make decisions for themselves.

Though Winnipeg's summer camps are filling up fast, the following is a list of camps that still have spots available.

CAMP DOUGLAS — YMCA

Campers ages 15 to 17 in the leadership camp spend 10 days learning important lifelong skills about leadership, communication, programming and children. Participants come up with programs for younger campers, guide children under the supervision of a counsellor and receive emergency first aid certification.

CAMP STEVENS — YMCA

The Wilderness Canoe Trips program offers kids ages 13 to 17 a challenging, but rewarding opportunity over two to six weeks to appreciate nature and the environment in remote Ontario. The staff that lead the canoe trips have extensive knowledge in counselling, camping and first aid. The camp also has overnight island camps available for ages eight to 12, and 13 to 15, where campers learn about outdoor living.

ASSINIBOINE PARK ZOO SUMMER CAMP

Though spots are limited, there is still some room for the only zoo camp in the city. Participants learn about animal behaviours, the environment and nature. The zoo features Wild Fun, Wild Science and Zoo Mysteries programs, perfect for kids in grades 1-6.

CHILDREN'S MUSEUM SUMMER CAMP

The museum's day camps help kids in grades 1-5 keep their minds and bodies active during the summer break. From design to mechanics, the program offers a wide variety of themes featuring hands-on activities, games and field trips to help kids create, learn and explore.

RED ROCK BIBLE CAMP

Campers can choose from a long list of daily activities, including canoeing, paddle boating, swimming, chapels, and special programs. For girls and boys, Kindle 1 and 2 are still available for grades 3-6. Ignite is also available for girls in grades 6-9.

UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA MINI U PROGRAMS

From active to creative day camps, children can learn new skills under the leadership of university students. The affordable programs still available include cheerleading, junior volleyball, tennis, wall climbing, drawing, indigenous culture, musical theatre, and magic tricks.

@rosereisman

This tender meat topped with a sweet fruit salsa makes for a great combination of flavours. You can safely cook pork to a medium doneness and enjoy the moistness of this lean meat. Recipe serves 4.

Ready in

Prep time: 15 minutes
Cook time: 15 minutes

Ingredients

- 1 1/2 lb pork tenderloin (one or two small)
- 3/4 cup finely diced mango
- 1/2 cup finely diced ripe avocado
- 1/4 cup finely diced red bell pepper
- 3 Tbsp finely diced red onion
- 3 Tbsp chopped cilantro
- 2 tsp olive oil

- 1 tsp minced jalapeno pepper
- 1 tsp lemon juice
- Salt

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 400 F. In a skillet or grill pan, sear pork on all sides for about 3 minutes. Place on baking sheet lined with foil and bake tenderloin for about 15 minutes, or until temperature reaches 135 – 140 F for medium doneness.

2. In a bowl, combine remaining ingredients. Slice pork thinly and spoon salsa over top.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
The problem you will be faced with today is the same problem you have faced many times before. Get it right this time and hopefully it won't bother you again.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Life isn't as tough as you seem to think it is. You have everything you need to accomplish your ambitions and find contentment both in your personal life and in your career.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Refuse to worry about a relationship issue. Tomorrow's full moon is sure to resolve the situation, after which you can move on, either alone or together. It's probably not as bad as it seems.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
If there is anything you have to do that requires a clear head it might pay to wait until Thursday or even Friday. Until then it's unlikely you will be thinking straight.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You will find something to smile about today — in fact you will wonder how and why you allowed yourself to get so upset over the weekend.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
If you get the chance to resolve a dispute of some kind you must not let it pass you by. You may have to make an apology you don't really mean but it's better than letting a senseless feud drag on indefinitely.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Even if you try to explain yourself in the simplest of terms you will still encounter people who refuse to believe what you say. Don't waste time because you have more important, and more exciting, things to do.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Try not to make a decision about a money or business matter today. For best results you should wait until the second half of the week. Even then it might be best to do nothing at all.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Discuss your differences with a rival openly and honestly today. The approaching full moon in your sign makes you more emotional than you need to be, so strive to be rational.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Doubts and fears you thought you had conquered will make a reappearance but you must not let them take over your life. Most of what you are worrying about is just in your head.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You are in one of your serious moods at the moment and anyone who tries to play games likely to regret it. But don't go too far or you could turn a friend into an enemy.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
You will find yourself up against someone who is just too tough for you today. Do you back off or do you go down fighting? Logic may have little to do with the answer.
